'Remodel & Renovations' Category Attracts Entries from Top Clubs in U.S.

EDGEWATER, Md. (April 9, 2010) - The editors of Golf Inc. magazine have announced that The Golf Club at South River, which recently completed a renovation of its clubhouse, was chosen as a runner-up in the Remodel & Renovations category of its national 2009 Clubhouse Competition.

Joining The Golf Club at South River as finalists were TPC Potomac at Avenel Farm in Potomac, Md., Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Md., and Daniel Island Club in Charleston, S.C. The winning renovation was for Moon Valley Country Club in Phoenix, Ariz.

"To be named a finalist in a national clubhouse competition by one of the industry's top publications and to be among such respected institutions is an honor and says a lot about what we offer our members and guests," said Mike Kriel, vice president of operational efficiency at The Brick Companies, owner of The Golf Club at South River. "Being a finalist also recognizes the expertise behind the renovation and our entire team is to be commended."

The renovation created The Bistro at South River, which includes a bar, lounge area with a fireplace and seating for upscale dining. The architect and interior design firm for the renovation was Feltus Hawkins Design, Nashville, Tenn., and the contractor was K3 Construction Group, with offices in Reston, Va. and Calverton, Md.

Members of The Brick Companies and The Golf Club at South River team will be honored by Golf Inc. at the upcoming Golf Inc. Spring Conference at the Amelia Island Plantation in Amelia Island, Fla., April 12-14. The projects are recognized in a feature story in the current issue of the magazine.

"We are pleased to honor these outstanding clubhouses," said Katina Cavagnaro, publisher of Golf Inc. "The quality of the entries was exceptionally high."

Judges for the competition were Andre Landon, design director/principal of EDI Architecture; Jim Richerson, general manager and director of golf, the Kohler Co.; and Bryan Webb, principal and director of design, MAI Design Group.
